The spring semester was one of great growth and accomplishment for the Corporate and Professional Responsibility Program. While continuing to conduct the continuing legal education ethics trainings that form the backbone of the program, we expanded into corporate compliance and liability trainings, with much success. In conjunction with Steve Brodie and Nathaniel Doliner of Carlton Fields, John Keogh of AIG National Union, CEPS Advisory Board member Lew Freeman of Lewis B. Freeman and Partners, Senior Vice President David Lieberman from the University of Miami Business and Finance Division, and Professor William Widen from the Law School, Kenny Nachwalter Fellow Robert Flicker worked on a panel discussion for corporate directors and officers. The half-day program was moderated by Center Director Professor Anthony V. Alfieri and was entitled, “To Be or Not To Be a Corporate Director: Liability Exposure of Corporate Directors.” The seminar drew over 80 directors, officers and in-house counsel members.

For the Bankruptcy Bar Association, a team of Paul Keenan of Greenberg Traurig, Lewis B. Freeman Fellow Randi Macdonald, Bankruptcy Bar Fellow Ihsan Speede Franklin and Undergraduate Intern Dante Trevisani prepared a dynamic and challenging training dealing with the ethical dilemmas that arise in the appointment of creditor’s committee counsel where there have been multiple representations of clients with possible conflicts. The trainings benefited greatly from the participation of Bankruptcy Judges Robert Mark and A. Jay Cristol in Miami, and Judges Raymond B. Ray and Paul G. Hyman in Ft. Lauderdale.

The pinnacle of the spring semester was the Criminal Justice Ethics Symposium: Round III. Along with co-chairs Steven Chaykin of Zuckerman Spaeder and Hy Shapiro of Hogan, Greer and Shapiro, Zuckerman Spaeder Fellow Ashley Sybesma, Hoeveler Fellow Manuel Alex Gomez, Interns Shanelle Boyd, Kellie Kagan, Cynthia Raleigh and Cheryl Tedeschi created a cutting-edge symposium which attracted more than 200 attorneys from all over the country. Visiting Senior Fellow Janet Reno delivered the keynote address. Over 30 stellar criminal justice attorneys participated on panels, and moderated sessions. Undergraduate Interns Aditi Kothekar, Shelly Garg and Lia Brooks devoted a great deal of time and energy to making the semester successful.

The In-House trainings were also a great success. Greenberg Traurig Fellow Josh Bosin, Intern David Smith and Undergraduate Intern Shannon Ashford prepared two legal ethics trainings. At Greenberg Traurig, they addressed the proposed changes to the Model Code of Judicial Conduct, and its possible effects on the relationship between attorneys and judges. For the Coral Gables Bar Association, with the help of Kenneth Harrison from Sugarman & Susskind, over 30 attorneys discussed the effects of two ABA Formal Opinions which addressed the duty of reporting misconduct among attorneys both in the same firm and in different firms. In conjunction with Audrey Sung of Holland & Knight, we trained attorneys from the Equipment Leasing Association Forum on “Navigating the Shoals of Sarbanes-Oxley,” on May 17, 2005 at the Loews Hotel on Miami Beach. Additionally, we collaborated with Noreen Frye from the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute at the University of Miami.

UM ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLOQUIA
by Post-Graduate Fellow Jessi Tamayo

This spring, the Arts and Sciences Colloquia students worked on more than 10 collaborations with the University of Miami undergraduates. Interns Melissa Cardoza, Mary Clark, Aziza Botchway, and Arts & Sciences Fellow Mary Wiethorn organized events ranging from undergraduate intern luncheons to large seminars that attracted many members of the greater Miami community.

A highlight was a panel discussion entitled, “Do Democracies Die Behind Closed Doors?” - a reflection on the post-9/11 anti-terrorism tactics moderated by Intern Mary Clark. U.S. Attorney Marcos Jimenez, Journalism Professor Sigman Splichal, Federal Public Defender Kathleen Williams, Howard Simon of the ACLU and Professor David Abraham from the Law School debated the difficult balancing required between privacy rights and national security.

Arts and Sciences Fellow Mary Wiethorn worked exceptionally hard to continue the collaboration between the Center and Roger Bell at the University of Miami Athletic Department. She arranged a panel discussion entitled, “Winning With Integrity,” which addressed ethical issues relating to Title IX, academic fraud and questionable recruiting standards in college sports. Athletic Director Paul Dee, Head Football Coach Larry Coker, Dr. Sue Mullane, Director of the University of Miami School of Education Ethics Program, Varsity football player Kelly Jennings, and Varsity volleyball player Elizabeth Tyson emphasized the importance of maintaining integrity in athletics.

Graduating Intern Aziza Botchway started a fantastic collaboration with the Graduate School of Education working with its Enrollment Management program. Along with Enrollment Management’s Director and Assistant Dean Grisel Valdes, Aziza researched and presented a dynamic seminar on ethics in higher education.

Special thanks to Arts and Sciences Fellow Melissa Cardoza who was invaluable throughout the year - organizing and supervising our 17 undergraduate interns. She arranged court visits, with Center Advisory Board Member the Honorable Jaqueline Scola, visits to law school classes, and multiple luncheons and seminars for the undergraduates. In addition, Melissa interviewed over 30 applicants for next year’s undergraduate class.
“Process is the product,” remarked Professor Richard Roe of Georgetown University Law Center in discussing the Street Law program in which he has worked for over 20 years and which is becoming a staple in American legal education. Georgetown Law School began its Street Law program in 1972. Over 70 law schools currently have Street Law clinics under which second and third year law students teach law in the community. The Center’s Street Law Program focuses on teenagers - the future of our country. Presenting them with ethical dilemmas and legal cases and controversies stimulates critical thinking and furthers their evolution towards responsible citizenship.

Professor Roe’s remark embodies the philosophy that the process of stimulating analytical thinking and moral reasoning is the victory in itself. The goal of Street Law is to improve the law students’ ability to understand and communicate legal concepts in order to spark the intellect and thought processes of the teenagers. This year, our “Street Lawyers” taught in three different forums: Palmer Trinity School; Miami Senior High; and at the University of Miami to undergraduates in the College of Arts & Sciences.

Palmer Trinity Fellows Nathaniel Tobin and Brooke Adams, Interns Josh Shore and Shagufa Hossain, and Undergraduate Intern Alicia Kelman taught ethics case studies in both Chaplain Adrian Parry’s and Justin Symington’s classes. In addition, there were two special events challenging and featuring Palmer Trinity students. First, Nathaniel, Josh and Shagufa drafted a Mock Trial which was “litigated” by Father Parry’s Senior class at the law school in April. The trial was based on Arkan Mohammed Ali v. Donald Rumsfeld, a pending class action alleging torture and violation of international law filed by former inmates of prisons in Iraq and Afghanistan, including Abu Ghraib – a compelling topic which the students addressed with passion and intellect in a trial staged at the law school. The second event was an environmental debate over possible drilling for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Brooke and Shagufa worked with Teacher Justin Symington to research and teach the issues concerning pending legislation to the 8th grade students who debated the issues before their parents.

At Miami Senior High, Hunton & Williams Fellow Lauren Bercuson coordinated weekly ethics teachings in two classes with Interns Risa Berrin, Nicole Wisenberg, and Allison Gillus. Areas of law covered included Constitutional law, Criminal law and Torts. Intern Nicole Wiethorn developed a training schedule and program to coach the high school students for the February Mock Trial competition in which all the Street Law students assisted, as well as Center graduates Sam Heller and David Birke. Hundreds of volunteer hours were dedicated to help these future litigators. Special thanks to Center Advisory Board member Juan Enjamio of Hunton & Williams for his continuing support of this project.

The undergraduate class, “Law, Public Policy & Ethics” focused on philosophical issues in the law as well as on areas of Constitutional law, Criminal law, and Torts. Visiting faculty included President Emeritus Tad Foote, Visiting Senior Fellow Janet Reno, Visiting Senior Fellow Ellen Freidin, and Center Advisory Board member Eric Buermann. Students all participated in Mock Oral Arguments, were taught to write as advocates for a particular cause or client, and each formally debated an ethical issue.

A highlight of this year is the formation of a collaboration with the Legal Magnet Program at Coral Reef High School which will commence in the fall.
GREENBERG TRAURIG-SPONSORED COMMUNITY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT CLINIC STRIVES FOR NEIGHBORHOOD EMPOWERMENT AND IMPROVEMENT IN MIAMI
by John B. Alfieri Fellow Angela Nolfi

This spring the Community Economic Development and Design Clinic (CEDAD) has fulfilled a much needed role within inner-city Miami and accomplished diverse and challenging objectives. CEDAD’s Low-Income Homeowner and Tenants Project continued to provide rights education and outreach throughout Miami on landlord-tenant, tax, and fair lending issues. Interns Eric Ray and Ronald Tomassi, and Undergraduate Intern Michelle Beyer, conducted rights awareness workshops for the Coconut Grove Homeowners and Tenants Association, Little Haiti’s Neighborhood Housing Services, Housing Opportunities Project for Excellence, and the Center’s Community Health Rights Education Clinic.

Moreover, CEDAD renewed and enhanced its partnership with the Miami Workers Center, a community-based nonprofit organization in Liberty City. Community Fellow Lauren Harper and Municipal Equity Project Interns Kelley Spencer, Emily Guerin, Lauren Littleton, and Mark Rooney assisted the Miami Workers Center in planning an anti-displacement campaign for the upcoming year. CEDAD Interns will help the campaign by conducting a vacant lot study and supplying a profile of laws and decisions involving land use and zoning. To inaugurate the campaign, the Municipal Equity Project interns presented a wonderful spring colloquium on Affordable Housing in Miami. More than 100 students and civic activists attended the Colloquium featuring Miami Workers Center Director Sushma Sheth, Northern Trust Bank’s Sheldon Anderson, UM School of Architecture Professor Chuck Bohl, Florida Legal Services Staff Attorney Charles Elsesser, and U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development Chief Miami Counsel Sharon Matthews Swain. Community Fellow Lauren Harper observed: “Our goal was to bring together a cross-section of affordable housing stakeholders from the private, public and nonprofit sectors to discuss potential responses to the affordable housing crisis in Miami. The discussions clarified the need for innovative financing as federal funding for community development dwindles, for public participation in the development process, and for a hybrid of litigation and legislative-based solutions.” Additionally, the Municipal Equity Project interns formulated a litigation strategy to remedy the high number of public housing vacancies in Miami. After diligently conducting primary and secondary research, the interns prepared an evidentiary memorandum and drafted necessary motion papers to effectuate this strategy.

Most recently, I have been the Fellow overseeing CEDAD’s Nonprofit Corporate Responsibility Project which is currently providing technical support and compliance counseling to not-for-profit corporations and faith-based organizations serving low-income neighborhoods. Legal Interns Adriana Riviere, Caroline Klancke, and Michael Foelster, and Undergraduate Intern Denise Calzabon, and I are in the first stage of preparing training and compliance materials for nonprofits, having conducted needs assessment strategy meetings with four inner-city organizations: the Coconut Grove Collaborative, Inc., the Martin Luther King Economic Development Corporation, the Church of God of the Prophecy, and the Urban Empowerment Corporation. We are providing reports for these organizations with recommendations, research, and resources tailored to their specific needs. Commenting on this important project, Intern Caroline Klancke remarked: “The most rewarding aspect of our work has been to empower these charitable organizations in Miami by providing them with some of the tools that they need to serve their communities more effectively.”

By the end of this semester, the Nonprofit Corporate Responsibility Project will have separate reports for each of the nonprofit groups which will complete the needs-assessment and recommendation phase of our long-term training program. Working with such motivated students and members of the community in the provision of our services has been a very rewarding and satisfying experience. I am proud that CEDAD has successfully taken on so many new challenges.
The Community Health Rights Education Clinic (“CHRE”) continued its unique, interdisciplinary relationship with the University of Miami Schools of Medicine and Nursing by providing pro bono legal assistance to our community. During the spring of 2005, CHRE students under faculty supervision, provided legal assistance to over 65 clients at five different medical care facilities throughout Miami-Dade County. CHRE students made weekly visits to medical clinics including obstetrics/gynecology, adolescent and family medicine clinics, the Pediatric Mobile Clinic at Jackson Memorial Hospital (“JMH”), and the Macdonald School Health Initiative at John F. Kennedy middle and high schools in North Miami Beach. CHRE also extended its services to the Center for Haitian Studies in Little Haiti, and the Jefferson Reaves Senior Health Center in Overtown.

While the physicians and staff of these facilities tended to patients’ medical needs, CHRE students tended to their legal needs by providing legal advice, referral services, and direct representation in areas of health care rights, public benefits, and immigration. Patients stated that if it were not for CHRE’s “health rights checkups,” performed directly at the medical clinics, they would have continued to live without knowledge of their legal rights.

Citizens Board Fellow Kiran Soni assisted a young HIV+ father by completing a living will and pre-need guardianship for the client and his newborn child. Kiran stated, “This semester I enjoyed the challenge of working with clients diagnosed with HIV/AIDS. Oftentimes, my conversations with these clients were difficult yet the clients began to trust me. I learned that it takes several conversations before the clients at JMH feel comfortable enough to share personal information about their family lives and situations.” Steel Hector & Davis Fellow Jennifer Ellis assisted HIV+ patients with living wills and other advance directives, while Citizens Board Fellow Andrea Nathan represented a patient of Jackson Memorial by filing an SSI/disability appeal with the Social Security Administration. Akerman Senterfitt Fellow Cory Calmes was honored with the law school’s Exemplary Service to the Poor Award for his work at Jackson Memorial. Cory reflected, “My weekly visits to Jackson Memorial Hospital’s Miami Family Program taught me more than I could have ever learned in a classroom. CHRE made a difference in many people’s lives. Being out in the community made me aware that there are so many in need of legal assistance, and that so many needs are not being met. Working with the Miami Family Program has changed my life.” Intern Nikhil Heble met with a grandmother at Jackson Memorial who was having difficulty caring for her newborn grandchild. The baby’s mother was HIV+ and mentally disabled. Nikhil helped obtain Medicaid for the baby, and found a pro bono lawyer for the grandmother, who is now in the process of becoming the baby’s legal custodian. Citizens Board Fellow Joanna Toy worked diligently to establish CHRE’s presence at its new site, the Jefferson Reaves Senior Health Center. A highlight of the semester was Intern Talia Houminer’s successful representation of an abandoned 17 year old Haitian national. Hal Arteaga and James Seeney of Shook, Hardy & Bacon worked pro bono with Talia to obtain a Special Immigrant Juvenile Visa, and ultimately permanent residence for the client. Talia stated, “My client told me that now he can live his dream of becoming a doctor or lawyer. Being able to help him obtain his residence after he was abandoned by his family put the practice of law into perspective for me. ‘Success’ has been helping someone accomplish a major life goal, while learning immigration law.” Peter R. Palermo Fellow Alexandra Parra, Interns Wendi Adelson, Andres Rubinoff, and Ajay Rai, filed extensive legal memoranda and presented expert testimony to the Miami Executive Office of Immigration Review in representing an Iraqi national seeking political asylum. Intern Wendi Adelson stated, “the opportunity to conduct oral argument and examine witnesses before an immigration judge has been the highlight of my law school career.”
