

Dennis O. Lynch Is Law School's New Dean

Dennis O. Lynch, professor and dean emeritus at the University of Denver College of Law and prominent expert on Latin American law is the new dean of the University of Miami School of Law.

He succeeds Mary Doyle, who had been interim dean since the May 1998 resignation of Samuel C. Thompson, Jr. Doyle, who also served as dean in 1986-1994, rejoined the faculty as professor of law.

"Dennis Lynch has had a close association with this law school since 1974. He loves this institution, and he will bring his considerable talent and experience to bear as dean," she pointed out. "Our school will be in very good hands."

Lynch, who joined the Miami faculty in 1974 and served as associate dean in 1983-86, moved to Colorado in 1990 to become dean of the University of Denver's law school.

Fluent in Spanish, he has been a Fulbright Scholar in economics in Venezuela, a program officer with the Ford Foundation in Colombia, and a consultant for the U.S. Agency for International Development on constitutional reform in Colombia, legal reform in Nicaragua, and the administration of criminal justice in Central America. In 1973-1977, he held an International Legal Center Research Grant to study the Colombian legal profession.

Lynch's teaching specialties are civil procedure, employment law and labor law.

A well-known lecturer on current issues in labor arbitration, he also has been a consultant to the Federal Trade Commission on labor antitrust issues and a member of the boards of directors of the International Third World Legal Studies Association and the Inter-American Legal Services Association.

A 1965 graduate of the University of Oregon, Lynch holds a JD degree from Harvard Law School and J.S.D. and LL.M. degrees from Yale Law School. He was admitted to the bar in the District of Columbia in 1969.

His selection to head the University of Miami School of Law was the culmination of an intensive nationwide search. The search committee, headed by Bernard Fogel, dean emeritus of the University of Miami School of Medicine, and co-chaired by Robert Waters, professor of law, included four other law professors, Law School alumni and student representatives, and a professor from the UM Department of Management.

"I look forward to this opportunity to work with the University of Miami's talented faculty students, and administration," Lynch said. "I am especially eager to meet with the Law School's alumni, to become re-acquainted with many of my former students and learn first hand about their professional careers."

Law Library's Everglades Collection Is Rare, Valuable Resource

By Alberto Montero-Valdes
Curator, Everglades Litigation Collection

The Everglades litigation collection housed in the School of Law Library's Special Collections and Archives Department is the largest collection assembled anywhere of legal documents and multimedia materials regarding the Everglades.

The collection was awarded to the Law Library in 1994 by the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Florida following a bidding process that included Florida International University and Florida Atlantic University.

Based primarily on documents produced from years of complex litigation over water quality degradation and water quantity disruption in the Everglades, the collection includes a

Law School Reflects City's 'Gateway to Americas' Role

The University of Miami School of Law—located in Coral Gables, just minutes from downtown Miami—has capitalized on its "Gateway to the Americas" location by developing one of the most extensive arrays of international expertise and course offerings to be found in any of the nation's law schools.

The international (especially Hispanic) focus is evident in the make-up of the student body. Over the last two years, UM Law has conferred 133 JD degrees on Hispanic students—the most of any U.S. law school outside of Puerto Rico. This year, the School has 241

Hispanic-Americans and students from 10 foreign countries enrolled in its three-year JD program.

At the graduate level, approximately 25 Hispanic-Americans and students from Spanish-speaking countries are enrolled in the Law School's seven LL.M. programs, the majority of them in the International Law program. Among them are many lawyers who have received degrees from foreign law schools.

In spring 1999, the Law School added a course based on the Spanish civil code and taught entirely in Spanish. It was one of the first courses to be taught in

Loyalty, Challenge, Potential Bring New Dean to UM Law

In early August, soon after he officially became UM Law's dean, Dennis Lynch talked with The Barrister about his decision to accept the position and about his expectations for the Law School.

Barrister: Why did you decide to accept the University of Miami School of Law's offer to return as dean?

Lynch: There were a number of reasons.

On a personal level, the University of Miami is the school that gave me the opportunity to be a legal scholar and educator. It was very good to me and gave me plenty of support, both professional and personal. It is an institution for which I have a lot of professional loyalty, so the opportunity to come back and lead the school is very gratifying.

Moreover, it's exciting to lead a school with such potential. We have one of the most productive and scholarly law faculties in the country, and we're located in the most dynamic, international city in the U.S. The faculty, the city, a strong legal community, a carefully selected and culturally diverse student body, a superb library—they're all here. The potential has never been fully realized, which presents us with a wonderful opportunity.

Barrister: How do you think that potential can be realized?

Lynch: We need to build on the quality of our educational programs—get the message out to the local and national bars of just how good they are.

We should make more use of a variety of ways for presenting or marketing our message to potential students, as well as to members of the legal and international communities. These will include not just brochures, media releases, and other written materials, but also more face-to-face meetings.

Barrister: Do alumni play a major role in your plans?

Lynch: Absolutely. Alumni are our ambassadors to the world—to potential students, to the legal community, to other alumni. It's very important that we keep them informed, involved with students, and proud of their school.

Barrister: It may be too early in your tenure to be asking this question, but how healthy do you think the Law School's relationship is with its alumni at this time?

Lynch: In terms of financial support, it's obvious that we're not at the level we need to be. Private law schools that are reaching their potential are receiving greater financial support from their alumni.

However, we do have good support from our alumni in terms of involvement in school activities. They are involved with our students in a number of ways, such as mentoring, participating with moot court activities, and helping students find jobs. We need to take even more advantage of their eagerness to be involved in those ways.

Also, we need our alumni to have confidence in our educational mission. It is important that they understand how much our faculty cares about educating students. Alumni should take pride in the quality of our faculty and their commitment to teaching.

Alumni have strong views. They care about the school, and we must listen to them and to the rest of the legal community and take their suggestions to heart. What our alumni have to say is very important. The fact that our alumni population is so large—approximately 14,000 altogether—and successful is a real asset for us.

Barrister: What do you think are other strong assets of UM Law?

Lynch: The most obvious is our faculty. We have one of the top faculties in the country, as measured by the volume of their publishing and the frequency with which their articles and books are cited by others. The faculty has an incredible range of interests and expertise, and they are especially strong in the areas of international law and social justice. Moreover, they are an excellent teaching faculty.

Our distinctiveness is a major asset, particularly in regard to our multicultural location, student-body, and faculty. This is the place to come to study transnational law, and we are one of the main educators of bilingual law graduates. Moreover, not only are we at the main point of contact between the U.S. and Latin America, our South Florida location also brings us considerable legal interaction with Europe.

Barrister: What are the primary challenges facing the Law School?

Lynch: At this point, the most imminent challenges are probably financial—taking the School through this period of student body downsizing, with its accompanying drop in revenue from tuition. It is crucial that we be able to maintain a good student-faculty ratio to ensure that students can have the interaction they need with faculty members.

We need to generate strong financial support from sources other than tuition to maintain and build on the strength of our programs. This requires convincing alumni and other members of the legal and business communities of the importance of our goals.

Other challenges are to take greater advantage of our faculty's wide-ranging legal expertise and to ensure that our students and graduates have excellent job opportunities.

The challenges are significant, but they pale in comparison to our potential. As the world moves rapidly toward a truly global economy, we are in a far better position than most law schools in our ability to capitalize on that evolution.

Former UM Law Dean Mary Doyle Accepts Interior Department Post

the vital issues and mission of the Department of the Interior. Mary has shown this high level of dedication to the environment for many decades and has made a sizeable contribution throughout her distinguished career."

Most recently, Doyle has specialized in research on the legal, political and scientific issues surrounding the restoration of the Everglades ecosystem in South Florida. Following her initial service as dean of the School of Law, she took a leave of absence to be dean-in-residence at the Association of American Law Schools in Washington, D.C. for one year. Her expertise involved legal education and the development of an environmental law curriculum in Russia and the Ukraine.

During the 1980s, Doyle served as a professor of law at the University of Arizona College of Law, specializing in water, land use, local government and property law and subsequently served as both a professor of law and the associate dean for academic affairs.

From 1979 until 1981, she served as an attorney at the Department of Energy, as associate general counsel, then deputy general counsel at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Doyle is a graduate of Radcliffe College and attended Boston Law School and Columbia Law School, where she received her law degree. While attending Boston College Law School, she was elected to the Boston College Law Review.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt has announced the appointment of UM Law Professor Mary Doyle as Counselor to the Secretary a position recently vacated by David Hayes, who is now Acting Deputy Secretary of the Interior.

Doyle, who is on leave from her position as tenured professor of law, was dean of the Law School in 1986-94 and served as interim dean in 1998-99.

"I am delighted that someone with the talent and legal stature of Mary Doyle has agreed to serve in the important position of Counselor to the Secretary," Secretary Babbitt said.

"It requires a person with a proven track record and great commitment to

As Florida Bar President, Osman Aims to Improve Lawyers' Image

As the new president of the Florida Bar Association, Edith Osman, Class of 1983, is a woman with a mission: to protect the nation's legal system by helping restore what it needs most to survive—the confidence of the people.

"Our legal system survives only because the people let it. If we lose the confidence of our citizens, we run the risk that lawlessness and self-help will slowly erode the rule of law," she warned.

In a speech to UM Law's first-year students during orientation in August, Osman pointed out that "our profession has faced much ridicule in last two decades. The Florida Bar is working very hard on many fronts to re-educate the public about who lawyers are and what we are committed to, and to restore to our profession the respect it deserves."

Osman was installed as president of the 65,325-member bar in June, after serving a year as president-elect. She is the second woman to hold the position. (The first was Patricia Seitz in 1993.)

"As attorneys, we are the guardians of the laws that define our society," she said at her swearing-in ceremony. "But, conventional wisdom tells us that, in the eyes of the public, we have gone from being a source of pride to a source of punch lines."

According to Osman, surveys show that 80 percent of the public perceives the U.S. legal system to be the best in the world. Furthermore, she said, the people who claim to dislike lawyers most have had the least contact with the legal system. "Put another way," she said, those who know us best, like us best, and for good reason."

In 1998, she said, Florida's lawyers contributed nearly one million hours in pro bono work and nearly $2 million in legal aid funding. In addition, nearly 15,000 Florida lawyers provided more than 1.5 million hours to local boards, schools, churches, synagogues, charities, civic groups and other organizations.

"Do you know another profession that has shown that kind of community commitment," she asked. "I don't. I also don't know of another profession that more effectively speaks for those who cannot speak for themselves. . . . We must let the public know it."

"Studies find that the key to turning around destructive cynicism lies in education—encouraging a better understanding of both the system and the people who toil in it. We need to bridge this information gap with the truth about our profession."

Osman said implementation of a communications program developed by the Florida Bar's board of governors over the past two years is one of her top priorities. The program centers on a new theme and logo: "The Florida Bar: Protecting Rights, Pursuing Justice, Promoting Professionalism." The words will appear on all Bar materials, letterhead, and brochures and on radio and television announcements.

A second major educational goal is to expand the Bar's professionalism initiative. "We must acknowledge and respect the diversity within our community," she emphasized. "We must recognize that fundamental fairness is at the core of our judicial system, and we must treat all people with courtesy and respect."

A third educational tool is the creation of media teams of local lawyers, who will write op-ed pieces for their hometown newspapers and respond to letters to the editor. "Team members also will sit down with editors and broadcasters to discuss coverage of legal issues. Moreover, the nearly 800 lawyers who have volunteered for the Bar's speakers bureau also will help carry the message to civic groups and into the public schools."

Another important Bar initiative is the recently-established Commission on the Legal Needs of Children, which will study how the justice system treats children. Chaired by Circuit Judge Sandy Karlan, the commission has 28 members, including Bernard Perlmutter, director of UM Law's Children and Youth Law Clinic.

Asked what issues the Florida Bar will be dealing with this year, Osman replied, "The multi-disciplinary practice question is the biggest issue on the horizon. The ABA has proposed a rule change to allow professionals to share fees with non-lawyers (such as accounting firms). This raises some ethics questions and could have a major effect on the way we practice law. The Florida Bar has proposed keeping the status quo until the issue has been more fully explored. We have a committee in place to study the issue before deciding whether to support the ABA's proposal or any other potential rule change."

A shareholder of Carlton, Fields, Ward, Emmanuel, Smith & Cutler, P.A., Osman practices commercial litigation and family law in the firm's Miami office. She joined the firm in 1998, after running her own practice for five years.

Edith Osman

Asked whether her Bar activities preclude carrying a full caseload at her law firm, she said, "With speaking engagements, writing projects, meetings and general Bar involvement, being president of the Bar is really a full-time job; however, with a lot of help from my partners and associates, I'm also able to maintain my practice." She added that her workdays typically last 12-14 hours.

However long hours are nothing new for her. She has been working doubletime for two decades, since the day she entered UM Law as a full-time student with two small children.

"I've been able to work like this because I love it," she said. "I love the legal profession—with its countless opportunities to do good—and I really like lawyers."

In her August 14 orientation remarks, she told 11s they were "blessed to be able to attend the University of Miami School of Law. It's a great learning institution, with a stellar faculty."

She urged students to not "let monetary considerations sway you. Work for justice, serve your clients, and follow your conscience, and the rewards will come."

Four Other UM Law Alumni Have Headed Florida Bar

In addition to Edith Osman, the current president of the Florida Bar Association, four other UM Law alumni have headed the organization, including: Burton Young, Class of 1950; Edward J. Atkins, '51; H. Russell Troutman, '58; and Samuel S. Smith, '60.

Burton Young

A partner in the North Miami Beach law firm Young, Berman & Karpf, Young was president of the Florida Bar Association in 1970-71 and served as president of the Florida Bar Foundation from 1975 to 1977. He also has chaired the 1977 Chief Justice's Advisory Committee of the Florida Supreme Court, the Florida Supreme Court's Select Committee to Study the Florida Board of Bar Examiners, and the Florida Bar's Family Law Rules Committee. In June 1985, an article in Town & Country magazine included him in its article on "The Best Lawyers in the U.S." Similarly, The Best Lawyers in America, 1993-94, an annual reference guide polling lawyers nationwide on the top practitioners in their field, named him one of the best divorce and family lawyers. In 1998, at the Florida Bar's annual meeting, he was honored with the Florida Bar Foundation Medal of Honor for his service and dedication to the public and for his administration of justice.

Edward J. Atkins

President of the Florida Bar Association in 1976-77, Atkins had served as a member of the association's board of governors for the 10 preceding years. He presided over the Dade County Bar Association in 1965-66 and was a member of the Federal and American bar associations as well as the International Association of Insurance Counsel and the Judge Advocates Association. In 1978, he was president of the University of Miami's Law Alumni Association. Atkins was associated with the Miami firm Walton, Lantaff, Schroeder & Carson. Nearly nine years after his death in 1979, his son, Michael, died in an automobile accident just before receiving his JD from UM Law.

H. Russell Troutman

When Troutman was president of the Florida Bar (1977-78), the American Bar Association conferred its Project Excellence Award upon the organization for its creation of the first interest on trust account program for the funding of legal services to the poor. In 1968-69, when he was president of the Orange County Bar Association, the Florida Bar Association named it the Outstanding Local Bar Association. He also has been on the board of governors of the Florida Bar and chaired the Florida Supreme Court Nominating Commission. He is a founding partner of Troutman, Williams, Irvin, Green & Helms in Winter Park and Oviedo, Florida.

Samuel S. Smith

President of the Florida Bar Association in 1981-82, Smith also was president of the Florida Bar Foundation in 1989 and secretary of the American Bar Association from 1993-96. Prior to assuming the presidency of the Florida Bar, he served on the association's board of governors for eight years. A partner in the Miami law firm Ruden, Barnett, McClosky, Smith, Schuster & Russell, Smith was a nationally known probate litigator and law office management expert. He was instrumental in establishing Dade County's model guardianship program and devoted countless hours of community service, usually benefiting programs helping children. He also served as an adjunct faculty member at UM Law. Shortly before his death from cancer early this year, the Florida Bar Foundation recognized his many contributions when it bestowed upon him its annual Medal of Honor, the Foundation's highest award for service to the public and profession.

million pages of documents and a million frames of microfilm, along with several hundred megabytes of scientific data, deposition transcripts and database information. Interspersed among formal legal documents such as pleadings, consent decrees, and hearing and deposition transcripts are maps, photographs, and reports, providing insight into the nature of the Everglades and its integral place in Florida's history and development.

One of nature's unique and most varied ecosystems, the Everglades has been recognized worldwide for its haunting beauty. The largest federal wilderness area in the east, Everglades National Park is also of international significance, having been designated as a World Biosphere Reserve in 1976, a World Heritage Site in 1979, and a Wetland of International Importance. It is the only wetland in the Western Hemisphere to receive these multiple designations.

Decades of governmental and private intervention in the form of drainage projects for flood control and agricultural development and increased urbanization, however, have diminished the primeval everglades to half its size.

Today the Everglades is one of the nation's most fragile and threatened ecosystems. Human intervention in this century has also disrupted the quality, timing, and path of the vital water flowing through its remnants.

The collection's materials come primarily from documents filed and produced in a landmark civil action filed by the United States in 1988 and from subsequent litigation spawned by that lawsuit, some of which continues to this day. In the original lawsuit, the United States government sued the South Florida Water Management District and the State of Florida Department of Environmental Regulation, alleging that they had violated state water quality laws and contributed to the degradation of the Everglades National Park and the Arthur R. Marshall Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

The Everglades case spanned thousands of pleadings, hundreds of depositions, and over a million pages of documents.

After four years of bitter litigation, the case was settled in 1992, when Judge William Hoeweler entered a settlement agreement between the federal and state parties, recognizing the severe harm the Park and Refuge had suffered and would continue to suffer if remedial steps were not taken. The agreement set out in detail the steps the State of Florida would take over the next 10 years to restore and preserve water quality in the Everglades. It was founded on the Marjorie Stoneman Douglas Act, Ch. 91-80, Laws of Florida, developed with the involvement and consent of agricultural interests.

The settlement agreement, however, allowed affected non-signatories to pursue state administrative remedies. Agricultural interests filed several such challenges, alleging that they were substantially affected by the agreement's remedial program, i.e. the final SWIM (Surface Water Improvement) Plan by the district and DER. These SWIM challenges were later consolidated into one action, Cooperative vs. SFWMD, DOAH 92-3038. The United States intervened on the district's side. Thirty-six collateral lawsuits were filed in different fora by the agricultural companies.

Settlement discussions between the district, the United States, and the agricultural interests eventually led to new state legislation, the Everglades Forever Act, Fla. Statute 373.4592, which removed the underlying basis for the SWIM challenges, and most of the lawsuits were dropped. By 1994, the last of these actions was withdrawn.

In August 1994, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit affirmed the 1992 Consent Decree and remanded the original federal law suit to district court for further consideration in light of the Everglades Forever Act (28 F.3d 1563 (11th Cir 1994)).

New litigation, however arose when the Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Florida filed several lawsuits against the federal and state governments over provisions of the Everglades Forever Act.

Generally, the most frequent in-person users of the collection have been University of Miami undergraduate and law students. The Law Library is working with law faculty and faculty in other University departments to integrate the collection's contents into environmental and political science courses.

Providing access to the collection's contents through the internet has become a major focus of the Law Library's goal of reaching as wide an audience as possible. The collection's Web site debuted in April 1997 after a conference on Everglades litigation was held in the Law Library. Since then the site has broadened the scope of its holdings on the internet making available hundreds of pleadings and deposition and hearing transcripts.

Web site visitors tend to be more diverse than in-person visitors. A representative sample of site visitors would include: law firms involved in complex environmental actions, scientists seeking documents related to remote sensing and economic impacts of legislation, environmentalists, and graduate students writing reports on Everglades hydrology. The site has gotten "hits" from as far away as Taiwan.

While it may not be possible to put all of the collection's materials online, staff members are identifying pleadings, depositions, hearings, exhibits, and other materials that will provide researchers and the general public with an understanding of the issues involved in the long line of Everglades water quality litigation.

Aside from presenting as much of the collection's contents online as possible, the staff intends to gather and make available pleadings and other documents from recent litigation, along with new legislation and links to news articles. Researchers can request hard copies of materials not available online but listed in indices. Indices and bibliographic databases cover a large percentage of the collection's holdings.

The Law Library's goal is to preserve and make accessible a balanced representation of the issues and arguments underlying the positions of diverse interests in important battles over the stewardship and preservation of one of nature's most unique and endangered ecosystems.

Researchers can view the collection at <http://www.law.miami.edu/library/everglades/>. Anyone who prefers to review the collection in person, should call 305-284-4093 at least 24 hours before he or she intends to visit.

3 UM Law Alumni Lead Fight to Save Everglades

Three assistant U.S. attorneys who graduated from the University of Miami School of Law were leaders in the Everglades litigation.

Suzan Hill Ponzoli, '78, was the lead litigation attorney from 1988, when she and a team of attorneys, scientists, and resource managers drafted the first complaint aimed at restoring the Everglades, until 1994, when the litigation was settled in the Florida Legislature through the Everglades Forever Act. She led a team of U.S. Attorney's Office (USAO) and Department of Justice lawyers that included as many as eight attorneys at one point. The large-scale efforts at restoration that are going on today are a direct outgrowth of that long, difficult litigation.

For her leadership, Ponzoli was recognized with numerous awards, including a 1994 Department of Justice Directors Award, a 1992 Everglades Coalition Public Service Award, a 1991 Florida Audubon Society Conservationist of the Year Award, and a 1989 Florida Wildlife Federation Award of Recognition.

Currently, she is deputy chief of the USAO's Appellate Division.

Tom Watts-Fitzgerald, '79, was a key litigator in the Everglades dispute when the federal government had already settled with the state agencies and was facing the sugar and agricultural industries head on. Today, he is chief of USAO's Environmental Crimes Section.

Maureen Donlan, '80, was one of the earliest litigation attorneys who represented the federal government through the USAO, joining Ponzoli in early efforts to get the State of Florida to acknowledge the pollution problems. Donlan continues to be a civil litigator for the USAO.

According to Ponzoli, the UM Law Library's Everglades Collection is an invaluable resource for researchers because of its wealth of historical and scientific documents. "It contains the scientific, historical and political documents produced by each party to the litigation," she pointed out.

"For the state and federal governments, this meant that agencies that had studied the flora and fauna of the Everglades for decades had to produce all documents reflecting those studies. For the industry litigants, their expert witnesses were compelled to share years of research. Sometimes, the industry research was only repetitive water quality data, but sometimes, it included, for example, a search of all the newspaper articles ever written on the Everglades—a fascinating compilation of clippings available just for the taking."

Also important, from Ponzoli's perspective, is evidence of the impact a powerful industry can have on the formation of policy regarding the use and preservation of a publicly held resource. "The sugar and agricultural industries have dominated the public policy decisions that have been made in regard to the Everglades from the very beginning," she observed. "The impact of that influence is undeniable when examining the documents in the collection."

New Generation of Lawyers

The Law School's Spring 1999 Hooding Ceremony saw the beginning of a new tradition, as several alumni who had children in the graduating class hooded them themselves.

In the photo above, Caroline Soret receives her hood from her mother, Assistant Dean for External Affairs Carol Cope, JD '80. Other hooding parents and their graduating children included: Nathan P. Diamond, JD '72 and Peter Diamond; Gary Carman, JD '74, and Jennifer Carman; Sandor F. Genet, JD '73, and Sol Genet; and Paul T. Dee, JD '77, and Tad Dee.

Altogether, UM Law conferred 400 JD and 87 LL.M. degrees at the May 16 ceremony at the Knight Center in downtown Miami.

Major B. Harding, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Florida, was the keynote speaker.

UM Law Students Offer Day of H.O.P.E.

University of Miami School of Law students started the new school year by offering a day of community service to six different Miami-Dade County agencies.

H.O.P.E. (Helping Others through Pro Bono Efforts) is a UM Law School program that offers opportunities for law students, faculty, staff and alumni to participate in a myriad of community outreach and legal advocacy projects.

On Saturday, August 28, approximately 45 H.O.P.E. volunteers spent the day brightening the lives of individuals in the Miami-Dade community. Groups of volunteers went to the Esperanza Center, Jackson Memorial Hospital, Ronald McDonald House, Miami Bridge, Camillus House and South Beach to do various service projects, from a beach clean-up to visiting residents and providing cheer with games, food and fun.

Vikky Mendez led a group of enthusiastic volunteers to the Esperanza Center where they entertained children and presented them with coloring books, markers and crayons. Project leader Ami DiLorenzo and friends brightened the day for patients at Jackson Memorial Hospital by sharing magazines, books and stories, while Betsy Goldsmith and friends played sports and ate pizza with residents of Miami Bridge, a youth services center that provides safe shelter to runaway and homeless teens. Ivette Arango's crew, including her grandmother, served lunch to more than 150 people at Camillus House, and Rob Rice and his beach patrol cleaned up the beach from 1st to 6th streets on South Beach. Alicia Hughes led a group of enthusiastic volunteers to the Ronald McDonald House, where they treated families of hospitalized children to a day of food and fun.

Mendez, DiLorenzo, Goldsmith, Arango, Rice, and Hughes all are second- and third-year law students. Many of the volunteers were first-year law students.

In addition to its volunteer activities, H.O.P.E. is raising funds to establish a fellows program that will allow students to continue their efforts in legal advocacy and community outreach throughout the school year.

H.O.P.E. invited members of the Law School and South Florida communities to support the fellows program by participating in a September 30 fundraising auction at the University of Miami Faculty Club. Local businesses and individuals donated a large number of attractive items for auction, ranging from BAR/BRI bar review courses to theatre and concert tickets, rounds of golf, meals at various restaurants, weekends in resorts, museum passes, health club memberships, car rentals, and software.

Individuals who would like to make monetary donations to the H.O.P.E. fellowship fund can do so by calling Dean Marni Lennon at 305-284-2599. Naming opportunities are available to donors interested in sponsoring specific fellowships.

School Reflects City's 'Gateway Role'

Spanish at any U.S. law school outside of Puerto Rico.

"Our goal is to give students a meaningful legal vocabulary in a real historical and cultural context. We want them to learn the words and learn the system, from an international comparative point of view," said Prof. Enrique Fernández-Barros—a former professor of law at the Catholic University St. Thomas Villanova in Havana and professor emeritus of Spanish at the University of Iowa—who teaches the course.

"Not only do our students see this area of study as an exciting intellectual challenge, they also know that it is very practical—especially here in Miami, one of the world's most international cities and a city with a massive and growing need for attorneys who understand a foreign system," he said.

Because of the popularity of the course in civil code, Fernández-Barros will teach it again next spring. This fall, he is teaching a course on the Spanish commercial code, also in Spanish. Moreover, in the spring semester, Prof. Edgardo Rotman—a world-renowned figure in international penology and crime policy and one of 10 individuals selected to help prepare an upcoming U.N. conference on the subject—will teach a Spanish-language course in comparative criminal law.

According to Associate Dean Richard Williamson, the Law School is considering several other courses to be taught in Spanish in the near future.

Much of the School's growing reputation as one of the nation's best places to study international law can be credited to its highly regarded faculty, many of whom have extensive international legal experience. In fact, of the School's 48 faculty members, 26 have published articles or books or taught courses in international law, comparative and foreign law, or maritime law within the past five years.

The School's Dean Dennis O. Lynch—who was a Fulbright Scholar in economics in Venezuela and served as a legal and constitutional reform consultant for the U.S. Agency for International Development in Colombia and Nicaragua—is a recognized authority on Latin American law, employment law, and labor arbitration.

Associate Dean Williamson is an expert on disarmament and international environmental law.

Prof. Keith S. Rosenn, the School's senior expert in comparative law and one of America's leading experts on Latin American law, holds the Inter-American Jurisprudence Prize from the Inter-American Bar Association for his "distinguished contribution to the development and clarification of law" in the Americas.

Prof. Bernard H. Oxman, the Law School's senior expert on public international law, is the director of the Law of the Sea Institute and frequently advises the U.S. State Department and foreign governments on international law issues.

Prof. Irwin P. Stotzky has been an advisor to elected Haitian Presidents Aristide and Preval and to Argentine President Alfonsín. He is one of the world's leading experts on the transition from dictatorship to democracy.

Prof. Alan C. Swan is UM Law's senior expert on private international law and international trade and the author of the most widely used text on international business transactions.

Prof. Elizabeth M. Iglesias and Prof. Francisco Valdes are driving figures in the "LatCrit" movement and co-directors of UM Law's Center for Latin American and Caribbean Law and of the School's highly popular Summer in Spain program.

The Law School also attracts visiting faculty from around the world, as well as adjunct faculty with experience in international transactions, adding even greater depth to the international and foreign programs.

A frequent visitor is Prof. Hugo Caminos, a judge at the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, in Hamburg, Germany. He is professor of law emeritus at the University of Buenos Aires, former Argentine ambassador to Brazil, and former general counsel of the Organization of American States.

With the international expertise and involvement of its faculty, its location at the Gateway to Latin America, and its multi-cultural student body, the University of Miami School of Law has become known as one of the nation's best places to study international and foreign law.

Following a June 7 luncheon in his honor, former Dean Mary Doyle thanks James H. "Booty" Nance, '56, for his $100,000 gift to the School of Law. In gratitude for his generosity, the Law School has dedicated its courtyard fountain to him.

UM Law's Faculty in the News

As an expert on cyber law, Prof. Michael Froomkin continues to be quoted in article after article on the topic.

For instance, the Washington Post (August 21), Cyber-Times Today (July 21) and the South Florida Sun-Sentinel (July 11) all sought his opinion for major features on encryption issues.

On the controversy surrounding the new regulatory powers assumed by the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN), the Washington Post (July 22), the New York Times (online version, June 7), and The Industry Standard (July 9) turned to him.

Articles in IntellectualCapital.com (June 10) and InternetNews.com (June 22) on "cybersquatting" (buying up various versions of domain names that someone else might be willing to pay a premium for at a later date) quoted him.

And, both the Wall Street Journal (front page, June 21) and the Wall Street Journal Interactive Edition (August 31) published articles about a paper ("The Next Economy") that he co-wrote with economic historian J. Bradford DeLong of the University of California at Berkeley. The article in the Interactive Edition called it "some of the most provocative thinking I've yet seen about the ways in which the Internet is going to change the world." ["The Next Economy" can be accessed on Froomkin's Web site at <http://www.law.miami.edu/~froomkin>.]

After a Florida jury ruled against the tobacco industry in the first class-action lawsuit by ailing smokers to come to trial, the media turned to Prof. Clark Freshman for commentary.

He was featured in articles in USA Today (July 8), Time magazine (July 19), The Miami Herald (July 9 and September 4), the South Florida Sun-Sentinel (July 7), the International Herald Tribune (July 9), and the Washington Post (July 8), and on CNN's The World Today (July 7), and The NewsHour with

Jim Lehrer (July 8). On CNN, he said, "This is going to be the largest exposure the tobacco companies have ever faced, and that's going to mean lots of money—lots of money coming out of the shareholders of tobacco companies, and it's also going to mean, probably, lots of claims in other states."

On September 4 The Miami Herald following a court ruling that the tobacco companies could deal with damage claims of each member of the landmark class-action suit on an individual basis, quoted Freshman as saying, "Big Tobacco will not have to write one big check for billions of dollars, but they will have to write hundreds of thousands of small checks for several million dollars over many years."

In a July 1 New York Times article on the outrage expressed by Miami's Cuban-American community after a well-publicized attempt by the U.S. Coast Guard to turn back a boatload of Cubans, Prof. David Abraham said, "The outcry is a function of the power of Cuban-American politicians in South Florida and the spectacle of seeing the incident live [on television]."

Another New York Times article (July 21) on the ongoing attempts of Cubans to illegally immigrate to the U.S. quoted Prof. Stephen Schnably as saying that another mass exodus from Cuba could come only with Fidel Castro's blessing, that "If he makes it clear at a time that people can just leave the island, then you will have an exodus."

A September 6 column in the Miami Herald carried the headline "UM Reopens JFK Case" and focused on "Evidentiary Inference and Advocacy: the Assassination of President John F. Kennedy," a course being taught this semester by Prof. John Hart Ely. The columnist, Joan Fleiselman, noted that, 35 years ago, Ely served as one of 17 staff lawyers on the Warren Commission.

News that the Florida Supreme Court Commission on Professionalism had honored Prof. Anthony Alfieri with its 1999 Professionalism Award received coverage in the Coral Gables Gazette and The Miami Herald. (See article below)

The South Florida Sun-Sentinel's July 19 article on Broward County's plan to improve the education of foster children quoted Bernard Perlmutter, director of UM Law's Children and Youth Law Clinic, as saying that the school district needs to refine its definition of surrogate parents. "My pet peeve is their failure to acknowledge that every child who is a ward of the state is entitled to a surrogate parent," he said.

In its "Professions" column, The Miami Herald noted that UM Law now offers a course based on the Spanish civil code and taught entirely in Spanish. It quoted Prof. Enrique Fernández-Barros as saying that expertise in a foreign legal system is especially important in Miami.

An article in the August 9 Miami Herald on Florida's grand juries over the past 52 years, quoted Prof. Bruce Winick as saying that, while grand juries across the country issue indictments on a range of criminal cases, in Florida, they generally hear only capital crimes. In the Herald's June 4 Broward edition, columnist Sue Reisinger cited Winick's "therapeutic jurisprudence" method as a means for law to play a role in healing society's drug- and alcohol-related crime problems.

Prof. Rose Heads NITA's Education Program

Prof. Laurence M. (Lonny) Rose has accepted the position of vice president and executive director of education for the National Institute for Trial Advocacy (NITA), effective July 1.

Responsible for the quality of NITA's faculty and for all of the organization's education initiatives, he will recruit and coordinate teachers who meet NITA's high standards for teaching trial advocacy. NITA has more than 1,000 faculty members and more than 50 program directors.

Last year, Rose was the winner of the 1998 Richard S. Jacobson Award for Excellence in Teaching Trial Advocacy. Presented by the Roscoe Pound Foundation, an affiliate of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, it is based upon the candidate's contributions to professional literature, student evaluations, demonstrated excellence in the trial advocacy program, teaching style, and interaction with students.

His affiliation with NITA is long-standing, dating back to 1975, when he was a student at the organization's National Session. He has been a member of NITA's teaching faculty since 1978. He founded NITA's Mid-America Regional program in Lawrence, Kansas, in 1981, and has been program director of both the Hanley Advanced Advocates program and the National Session since 1985.

Rose, who was vice dean of the University of Miami School of Law from 1995-98, will continue his responsibilities as professor of law and director of the School's Litigation Skills Program.

Fla. Supreme Court Professionalism Award Goes to Alfieri

the award is a tribute to Alfieri's work in developing the Center for Ethics and Public Service at UM Law and to the Center's work in providing training to law students, the business and legal communities, and the general public.

"This program is truly one to be proud of and one that we hope can be duplicated in or expanded to other parts of the State," Justice Harry Lee Anstead said in a letter informing Alfieri of his selection.

The commission created the annual award recently to recognize a faculty member in one of Florida's law schools who, through teaching, scholarship, and service to the profession, best supports and exemplifies the organization's mission.

[The mission is: "To promote the fundamental ideals and values of the justice system and the legal profession, and to instill those ideals in those persons servicing and seeking to serve in the system."]

Last year, the Center for Ethics and Public Service received the American Bar Association's prestigious E. Smythe Gambrell Professionalism Award.

The Center is an interdisciplinary project focused on teaching the values of ethical judgment, professional responsibility, and public service in the practice of law. Staffed by Law School student fellows and interns performing under Alfieri's supervision, it provides training in ethics and professionalism to the Law School and to the University as well as to Florida's business, civic, educational and legal communities. Since its founding in 1996, the Center has reached out to help educate nearly 2,000 people.

At the Law School, the Center sponsors workshops and symposia, participates in an ethics orientation program for first-year students, and presents continuing legal education courses.

Workshops sponsored by the Center have included: Criminal Defense Ethics; Women in the Legal Profession; Race and the Legal Profession; Balancing a Family and a Legal Career; Ethical Dilemmas in International Lawyering; Media, Law and Politics; Prosecutorial Ethics; Hiring and Promotion Ethics; Women Rainmakers; Sports Law Ethics; and In-House Counsel Ethics.

Symposia have included: Hate in America; Town Meeting—Crisis in the Legal Profession; Hate on the Internet; and Lawyer Professionalism.

The Center recently accepted an appointment as legal ethics advisor to The Alliance for Ethical Government, a countywide consortium of public and private leaders from selected business, civic, educational, and legal communities.

The Florida Supreme Court Commission on Professionalism has selected University of Miami School of Law Professor Anthony Alfieri as the winner of its 1999 Professionalism Award.

Author, Company Founder—She's Off to Fast Start

February 8, 1999, issue of the New York Law Journal and "Raising Capital on the Internet—A Realistic Examination of eSecurities" in the February 1999 issue of eSecurities.

The new company and the magazine articles had their genesis less than two years ago, when she was working part-time for a Fort Lauderdale law firm (Atlas, Pearlman, Trop and Borkson), where she was responsible for researching how to offer securities over the Internet. Through her research, she met Leo Feldman, president of IPOnet, a company that does Internet security offerings. In 1998, she joined IPOnet as director of business relations. She and Feldman formed Rule 506.com as a subsidiary of IPOnet to complement the parent company's security offering program; they are awaiting final SEC approval to conduct business.

Her work with those two companies was the basis for the three articles.

"The articles explored a very timely issue—the offering of securities over the Internet—that is relevant to a cross-section of legal concerns and specialties," she commented.

Meltzer has accepted an associate position in the Miami office of Gunster, Yoakley Valdes-Fauli, and Stewart.

After many years in the workforce, most people would be proud to state that they had formed a company and published articles in three journals. Renae Meltzer had done that even before she finished law school.

The co-founder of a company called "Rule 506.com," she published an article on "The Expansion of the General Solicitation Rules of the 1933 Act" in the June 1999 issue of the Florida Bar Journal.

Other articles by Meltzer—who received her JD from UM Law in May—include "Raising Capital with Regulation D's Three Exceptions" in the

Kozyak, Tropin, Throckmorton Strong Supporter of UM Law

It's good to have friends, and UM Law has been fortunate to have the friendship of the Miami law firm of Kozyak, Tropin and Throckmorton.

Each year, for the past five years, the firm has presented a full-tuition scholarship to a third-year student who is both an African American and has an outstanding record in trial advocacy.

The current holder of the Kozyak, Tropin and Throckmorton Scholarship is Val Shealey, who, as a second-year student, distinguished himself in last spring's Litigation Skills I class.

The firm also awards the John Kozyak Bankruptcy Prize of $5,000 each year to the student who performed best in the previous year's bankruptcy classes. Kozyak has contributed a considerable amount of time and effort to help UM Law students compete in a national bankruptcy moot court competition, arranging a local competition, raising funds, and accompanying students to New York City for the national event.

Last fall, the firm gave UM Law $50,000 as the lead gift for the Friends of the Litigation Skills Program's enhancement fund. In recognition of that gift, the litigation skills center is now known as the Kozyak, Tropin and Throckmorton Office Suite. For many years, firm members Harley Tropin, Paul Huck, and Ken Hartmann have been active instructors in the Litigation Skills Program.

In addition, Laurel M. Isicoff (partner) and Detra Shaw-Wilder (associate) serve on the board of the Law Alumni Association, and members of the firm volunteer to help in student recruitment and serve as mentors to minority students.

In Memoriam

The dean, faculty, students, and alumni of the University of Miami School of Law honor the following alumni and friends of the School of Law who have died during 1999.

We are grateful for their participation in the development of UM Law, and we extend condolences to their family members and friends as they mourn their loss. While these friends will always be a part of the School of Law we will miss their presence among us.

Judge Popper Was Admired By Peers

David Popper, Class of '52, passed away May 19 at age 73.

Popper was a lawyer for 15 years before being appointed by Gov. Claude Kirk to the Dade Circuit Court bench, where he served for 11 years before returning to private practice.

As a Dade Circuit Court judge, in 1971, he was among the first to rule in favor of a patient's right to die, determining that Carmen Martinez, a Cuban refugee with a terminal blood disease, should not have to live in pain.

During his judicial tenure, Popper had the distinction of not only sitting as a circuit court judge, but also of sitting on several district courts of appeal as an associate judge or visiting judge, as well as sitting on many occasions as a visiting judge on the Florida Supreme Court.

Admired by his judicial peers, he was honored by a Resolution Memorandum from the Florida Conference of Circuit Judges stating: "... his sterling years on the Circuit Bench, in Dade County, Florida, were evidenced by his steadfast adherence to the rule of law combined with his compassion and understanding for the need of the people who came to the Court seeking fairness and justice at his hand. ..."

91% of 1998 UM Law Grads Found Jobs Within 9 Months

Ninety-one percent of the Law School's spring 1998 graduates found jobs within nine months of graduation. This hiring level is a sharp increase over that reported to the National Association for Law Placement for the previous year's UM Law graduates.

The current 91 percent hiring figure reflects improvement in both the national and South Florida legal markets and the high-quality work of UM Law's Career Planning Center, headed by Marcy Cox.

"The Center has developed job-placement strategies that are yielding excellent results for our graduates," Cox stated. "In addition, the Career Planning Center now has much better ability to keep in touch with students after graduation and to know when they have accepted employment. Our statistics on the classes of '98 and '99 are much more accurate than for previous years."

There also are encouraging reports from students who graduated last spring, many of whom already have secured legal positions around the country.

Increasingly, UM Law graduates are moving on to judicial clerkships. One 1999 graduate has joined the Hon. Peter T. Fay as a judicial law clerk with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. Another has joined Justice Fred Lewis, '72, as a judicial law clerk with the Supreme Court of Florida. Other graduates have secured judicial clerkships stretching from the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida to the State Court of Appeal in Hawaii.

In addition to prestigious judicial clerkship opportunities, many 1999 graduates have been offered positions with some of the best firms in the nation, including Baker & McKenzie; Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft; Dewey Ballantine; Dorsey & Whitney; Greenberg, Taurig, Hoffman, Lipoff, Rosen & Quentel; Holland & Knight; Howrey & Simon; Kirkpatrick & Lockhart; Lord, Bissel & Brook; McKenna & Cuneo; Morgan, Lewis & Bockius; Proskauer Rose; and White & Case.

Along with courts and private law firms, government and public interest groups (such as the Legal Assistance Foundation of Chicago and the offices of the Dade County Public Defender and the Miami-Dade State Attorney) have extended employment offers to this year's graduates, as have such corporate employers as Chase Manhattan Mergers & Acquisitions and Pricewaterhouse Coopers.

Message from President, Law Alumni Association

Greetings to My 14,000 Fellow Alumni:

Yes, believe it or not there are more than 14,000 alumni of the University of Miami School of Law.

Sometimes wonder what all of you are up to in your careers and in your lives. I recently spoke to the incoming 1Ls at the Dean's Welcome Dinner, and it was fun reporting some of the successes of members of my class, the Class of 1972. Of course every graduating class has its own honor role of alumni who have had wonderful careers and who have had special achievements in their lives.

The Law Alumni Association is putting together a plan to recognize our most distinguished graduates, celebrating the achievements of UM Law alumni from our School's founding 71 years ago to the present. What we have in mind is evidence of high achievement, such as landmark legal victories, election to high public office, appointment or election to the judiciary leadership in major corporations, awards recognizing outstanding professionalism or public service, etc. However our plan is still in the formative stage, and we welcome your ideas for what criteria we should use and who should be honored.

For the project to be a success, we will need help from a large number of people, from every class that has ever graduated from UM Law. Along with your ideas, we need to hear from you about your successes and those of your classmates and alumni friends. Please send your comments to me by e-mail at alumnipres@law.miami.edu.

A new and excellent communication tool is the 1999 Law Alumni Directory, published this summer by the School of Law. Listing all 14,000 alumni by name, class, geographic location and areas of specialty it is a wonderful book (or CD Rom) that can help us locate and reconnect with one another. In case you forgot to order one, a limited number is still available by calling the publishing company at 1-800-982-1590.

Along with the e-mail addresses listed in the directory, we continue to collect new e-mail addresses and update others. If you would like to be added to an e-mail list to receive Law Alumni event information or to participate in Law Alumni e-mail discussion forums, please let us know by contacting me at the e-mail address above or the Office of Law Development and Alumni Relations at any of the addresses listed in the masthead on page 2.

A great opportunity for rekindling our relationships with the School of Law will be our 51st Annual Homecoming Breakfast, on Saturday, November 20, preceded by the ever-popular "Morning Spirits" party on The Bricks. It is a wonderful tradition and a tremendous amount of fun. I look forward to seeing you there.

The Law Alumni Association is pleased to welcome Dennis Lynch as our new Dean of the Law School. He is an outstanding choice, selected from well over 100 highly qualified candidates. It is a new beginning, and it looks like a very promising one at that. Dean Lynch has expressed a strong interest in forging a solid relationship with alumni and hopes to meet many of you in the near future and welcome you back on campus for a visit. The Law Alumni Association will build a new unity with Dean Lynch and the faculty to give the students the best legal education possible and to help the University of Miami School of Law reach new heights.

Det H. Joks

President, Law Alumni Association

51st Annual LAA Homecoming Breakfast

The 51st Annual Law Alumni Association Homecoming Breakfast—the last such breakfast to occur this century—will take place on Saturday, November 20, on the Coral Gables campus.

The Hon. R. Fred Lewis, JD '72, who was recently appointed to the Supreme Court of the State of Florida, will be the keynote speaker. New UM Law dean, Dennis O. Lynch, will address the audience during the program. This year's master of ceremonies will be Ted Klein, JD '64, who will delight and amuse the crowd with his lively sense of humor.

Plan to join fellow alumni, friends, and members of the South Florida judiciary and School of Law faculty beginning at 8:00 a.m. with everyone's favorite happy hour, "Morning Spirits," on the Law School Courtyard (the Slab). The Homecoming "power" breakfast will be served at 9:30 a.m. in the newly renovated Whitten University Center Food Court (the old "Ibis Cafeteria"), a short stroll away.

Don't miss the Law Alumni Association's preeminent event of the year and the opportunity to renew your support for the University of Miami School of Law. Homecoming is a good time to recognize this great institution we are all affiliated with and to acknowledge the valuable contributions UM Law has made to the South Florida community.

Dean's Circle Members Tops Among UM Law Benefactors

Membership in the University of Miami School of Law Dean's Circle reflects a high level of commitment to the School and a shared vision for ensuring excellence in legal education.

By making annual gifts of $1,000 or more to the Law Annual Fund, members place themselves at the head of a partnership of alumni, parents, and friends who, with the dean, students, faculty, and administrations, are dedicated to ensuring that the School takes its place among the nation's leading law schools. CLASS OF 2000 THIRD-YEAR STUDENTS

CHRISTIE CEBALLOS spent the summer after her first year as an intern for Judge Alan Gold, a U.S. district judge for the Southern District of Florida, and continued to work for him during the fall semester of her second year. Following graduation, she plans to return to work for him as a judicial law clerk. Through the On-Campus Internship Program, she has been employed by the Miami-based law firm of Kenny, Nachwater, Seymour, Arnold, Critchlow & Spector, with whom she is working during the fall semester of her third year.

ANDREA BAWART, who is interested in public and international law, spent the summer working for Holland & Knight in Washington, D.C. She said her most interesting projects included: research on a public land use issue involving right of way for the D.C. government to build a bridge; interpretation of D.C. environmental regulations to determine possible penalties for failure to disclose underground storage tanks on property that has been put up for sale; involvement in various lobbying efforts; and research on international arbitration law under NAFTA.

STEVE HELFAND and JASON WEISS each received the Florida Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers award through the Litigation Skills program as the top two second-year law students who show great promise in the practice of criminal litigation.

BROOKS HOLCOMB was a 1999 summer associate in the tax and estate planning department of O'Connor, Cavanagh, Anderson, Killingsworth & Beshears, P.A., a full service firm of approximately 150 attorneys in Phoenix, Ariz. He researched and drafted memoranda of law on the following projects: Estate tax valuation discounts for LLC operating agreement restrictions in lieu of I.R.C. Chapter 14, double step-up in basis for Arizona community property with right of survivorship, and tax effects of using CRUTs as beneficiaries of IRAs and other qualified plans. "I had a fantastic experience," he said. "My interviewers were cognizant of Miami's strong reputation in tax and estate planning, and that helped me get the job."

ADAM HO ROWITZ was a judicial intern with the Bankruptcy Court of the Southern District of New York during the summer of 1998. He said the job was exciting because the district is the venue for some of the largest bankruptcy proceedings in the country. He was responsible for researching diverse bankruptcy law issues and drafting memoranda. He also prepared reports detailing facts and legal issues of particular cases.

NELDA LAWRENCE, KIM LEARY, JORDAN LEWIN AND DAN ROGERS represented UM Law at the state moot court competition held at the annual meeting marking the 50th anniversary of the Florida Bar in Boca Raton in June 1999. AMY BUDOW was the alternate who prepared with the team members each step of the way.

GUILLERMO LEVY worked as a judicial intern in the chambers of Judge Gerald Cope, a judge for Florida's Third District Court of Appeals, during the summer following his first year of law school. Following his second year, he worked as a summer associate in the Miami office of Steel, Hector, and Davis, where he completed assignments from several of the firm's practice areas, including real estate, corporate, and bankruptcy. He also had the opportunity to work in the firm's Venezuela office for two weeks.

VICTORIA MENDEZ found her summer 1999 employment in the Dade State Attorney's office through the Litigation Skills Clinical Placement Program. "The experience I gained was terrific," she said. "I represented the State on the circuit and county level. In the circuit level, I participated in Baker Acts and Marchman Acts. I also performed research, attended depositions, and attended court on a daily basis. I strongly encourage students to participate in the clinical program."

KATHLEEN PHANG was presented the Thomas Ewald award during the Spring 1999 semester. The award is given every semester to the law student in the Litigation Skills program who best exemplifies the devotion to high standards and ethical conduct followed by Tom Ewald.

VALDOSTON SHEALEY received the Kozvak/Tropin & Throckmorton scholarship from the Litigation Skills program. Established in 1995 by one of Miami's leading law firms, the third-year full scholarship is awarded to a second-year minority law student with an interest in trial advocacy.

DON WERNER spent the summer as an intern for sports agent Leigh Steinberg in Newport Beach, Calif. West performed a wide range of duties, including devising and managing an agent registration program to comply with regulations in 20 states, and he often attended dinners with Steinberg's clients and learned much of what industry insiders already knew. West serves as the president of the Student Bar Association, as vice-president of Iron Arrow Society and as an active member of the Society of Bar and Gavel.

KELLY L. WRIGHT spent the summer of 1998 as an intern for a state criminal court judge through the law school's Eleventh Judicial Circuit program for 1Ls. "I made valuable contacts, which led to me being recommended to newly appointed U.S. Magistrate Judge Andrea M. Simonton for a summer internship this year," she said. Her responsibilities for Judge Simonton included drafting proposed judicial orders, and preparing the judge for hearings by researching the law and reviewing the submitted motions, as well as the entire file. Miami Law Alumni Want to Know

From all reports, the most avidly-read section of the Barrister (for both the printed and the Web site versions) is "Class Notes." The Law School's more than 14,000 alumni want to know what their classmates have been doing—about the awards they've received, high-profile cases they've won, law firms or cities they have moved to, pro bono activities they have undertaken, spouses they have married, etc.

It's easy to ensure that your news gets into the communications network: Just fill out the form below and send it (along with a photograph of yourself, if you like) to John Burch, Director of Law Publications and Communications, School of Law, University of Miami, P.O. Box 248087, Coral Gables, FL 33124-8087.

If you would like to comment on a Barrister article or on an issue of importance to other UM Law grads through a letter to the editor, please send that submission to John Burch, as well.
